SETBACK FOR SPRING IN NORWICH

If there is anything in the belief that the last of the month is the calendar day for the next, we are in for a lovely April.

Hopes of an early spring that had seemed so well underway were given a setback from which they will not soon recover, because of a visitation of real New England weather, the kind that Mark Twain said was unequalled because of its wonderful variety. Beginning with a drizzling rain that started about 7 o'clock Thursday evening and grew to a driving storm about 3 o'clock Friday morning, continuing through the morning, the weather shifted to sleet and then to snow about noon Friday and kept snowing steadily until far into the night.

Along with the rain and snow came high winds and a drop in temperature, which gave the most realistic touch of winter weather to the last few months. By Friday night there were two or three inches of snow in places where the wind allowed it to level. Although many a snow storm is eventful, this one was unusual because of frozen sleet underneath, while good sized drifts were piled up in corners and sheltered spots.

Trolley cars were off schedule pretty generally as the evening wore along, especially on the interurban lines, and travelers coming to the city from parts of the state said the same conditions prevailed everywhere.
